Fribourg profile

It is possible to take a doctorate in Political Science at the Department of European Studies and Slavic Studies of the Faculty of Humanities.

The unit of Political Science in Fribourg specialises in comparative political science, i.e. in particular in the empirical study of institutions, political attitudes and political participation in national and sub-national comparison. Another distinctive characteristic of Political Science in Fribourg is its specialisation in Eastern Europe. This geographical orientation stems from a longstanding tradition in Political Science at the University of Fribourg which is unique in the whole of Switzerland and offers excellent networking with universities and partners in Eastern Europe.

The thematic focus covers fields of research – and therefore possible doctoral projects – on the following subjects:

- Political systems of Eastern European states, comparison of political regimes
- Political transformation processes in Eastern Europe, democratisation and authoritarianism in Eastern Europe
- Political behaviour and political attitudes
- Protest and social movements
- Political parties

Doctoral students of Political Science have the possibility of participating in the events of the CUSO Programme doctoral en science politique (PDSPO) or applying to participate in doctoral programmes with specialised thematic areas.
